

Interpretation of conversational verbs in the dialect of the Dastjeh village a division of the city of Fasa

Maryam Alimoradi¹

Abstract

Accents and dialects of different regions of the country are of great value and importance, and recording them can prevent their destruction. The village of Dastjeh, from Fasa district with a huge amount of local words, especially in the field of verbs and their applications in the language of the people's conversation can be a good source for the speakers of the language, and it is essential to record it; The verbs sometimes come to the conversation in simple, sometimes compound words with particular meanings, and they are the product of the specific culture and thought of people who have used the mind to convey their thoughts to the audience over time and are now destroying and if the accumulation of verbs does not take place, it would be forgotten in the long run. Accordingly, the purpose of this research is to record the common verbs of their daily talks and oral language of this place's people. They should be recorded before its disappearance and destruction among the people of this region.

Keywords: accent, verb of dialect, Fasa, Dastjeh

1. Assistant Professor, Department of Persian Language and Literature, Bandarabbas Branch, Islamic Azad University, Bandarabbas, Iran.
Email: b12alimoradi@yahoo.com.